

Auburn School Board Approves Accreditation Change

(KLZA)-- The Auburn Board of Education has decided to make a change in the school districts accreditation.

Superintendent Kevin Reiman explained that in the past several years, the Auburn District did not feel the Advanced Education, formerly North Central was giving Auburn the bang for their buck they had previously. The Auburn School District had been with the same group for approximately 100 year.

Auburn Public School's will now be accredited through the Nebraska Department of Education accreditation model.

The Board approved a three-year lease with Mark Harms to farm the School District owned McGrew property. Harms will pay the District $10,500 annually.

A lease for use of the gymnasium at the Southeast Training Center in Stella, the former Southeast Consolidated School was approved. The Auburn School District will be able to use the facility for basketball practice this winter and if needed volleyball in the fall. The cost to the District is essentially the cost of the utilities to heat the gym.
