

<http://www.MSCNews.net/news/index.cfm?nk=9963>

Strong Hiawatha Odor Posed No Threat

A strong odor in Hiawatha Wednesday evening causes alarm, sending emergency crews into action, fearful that an anhydrous leak had occurred(Play Audio :11 seconds)

That's Brown County Emergency Preparedness Director, and Sheriff's Investigator, Randy Linck who says the investigation into the smell was quickly launched following reports from the public(Play Audio :18 seconds)

While the odor was very real, Linck says the danger it posed turned out not to be(Play Audio :27 seconds)

Although there was no actual threat, Linck says the public response was correct, reporting to authorities what could have been a life threatening situation.